

Key Account Management for Posts

The third week of the four-week Marketing and Innovation for Posts course incorporates a special workshop on Key Account Management for Posts (KAMP). For many Posts, it's always more profitable to boost the sell more to the existing customers rather than maintain relationships with numerous short-term clients who only generate small transactions. Knowing how to provide existing customers with something that can benefit them can help you reach your sales quota with far fewer transactions. It also saves you a lot of time, which you can spend on strengthening your existing business partnerships. This workshop will concentrate on building stronger relationships with fewer customers who show business potential, which means they can increase the average size of sales deals. Through investing in relationships with key accounts, managers increase customer loyalty and trust. Key Accounts are significant to an organization's sustainable, long-term growth and require a substantial investment of both time and resources.
